Dave followed his nose into the shop. There was a new scent in the air. It was not unlike the other scents he was used to, but there was something quite distinctive about this one. He found David at the brewer and wrapped his arms around the shorter man's waist, resting his chin on his shoulder.

"Is it ready?"

David smiled and nodded.

"I can try it first?"

He nodded again. He held a mug up for Dave, who practically squealed in excitement.

"It's just coffee," David laughed.

He kissed David's cheek. "It's not just coffee! It's your coffee, David!"
